STAY WARM, SAFE

With Chicago starting off the New Year with several inches of snow and its first real cold-blast of the season, according to meteorologists, RedEye wants to help you be ready this time around. We compiled this list of tips. Find even more online at redeyechicago.com/wintertips. R.C.

HOME

Kristen Pratt, program coordinator for the Chicago Conservation Corps, an organization that has distributed weather kits to Chicago homes, offers these tips for weather-proofing your apartment:

- » Buy foam or plastic strips at the hardware store that can seal up cracks in door and window frames.
- » Keep some of the cold out with a window insulation kit—the kind that you use your hair dryer to shrink the film into place.
- » Ask your gas company to give you a pre-programmable thermostat and pipe insulation, which the company gives to customers for free. Set your thermostat to 68 degrees when you're home, and 60 when you're not.

COMMUTE

Check out these mobile apps to help plan your commute:

- » HopStop
- » Moovit
- » Roll with Me, for tracking CTA wheelchair accessibility
- » CycleFinder, for Divvy users looking to shorten their commutes

It's normal to feel stress, anxiety and depression in the winter, according to Jeff Greeson, professor of psychiatry at the University of Pennsylvania. "A lot of people do notice a dip in their mood with less light, even if it's subclinical," or, in other words, not severe enough to warrant a medical diagnosis, he said. But how do you beat back those negative feelings?

- » Exercising, even when you don't feel like it, can elevate mood.
- » Take the time to go out and get some sunlight every day, or invest in a special light therapy lamp that mimics the sun.
- » Meditate. "If we're not 100 percent present, we are probably spending time worrying about getting somewhere or not getting somewhere," Greeson said.
- » If you feel your symptoms getting worse, find a therapist.

Ready to break some records, Chicago? Temperatures could drop overnight Wednesday to record lows, making Thursday the coldest Jan. 8 since 1942, when temperatures dipped to -11 degrees, the National Weather Service said.

With a wind chill warning in effect beginning Wednesday, Chicago is bracing for the cold, with officials preparing to deal with closures, cancellations and possible commuting issues. Chicago Public Schools canceled classes Wednesday, and by Tuesday 130 flights out of O'Hare had been canceled.

The closing announcements came ahead of a cold front from the Canadian Rockies that's expected to bring daytime temperatures hovering around zero and wind chills of -25 to -35 degrees, according to the National Weather Service. Evening temperatures are expected to fall to between -5 to -13 degrees while wind chills remain about the same as earlier in the day.

Last year's winter approached or broke multiple records in Chicago for frigid temperatures, total subzero days and cumulative snowfall.

Some Chicago residents say Chiberia 2014 prepared them for winter life here.

Karl Castaneda got his first taste of living in a city where it snows when he moved to Chicago from Miami last year. But he wasn't prepared for the blasts of cold that hit the city in the first few months of 2014. Last winter, Chicago experienced a record-setting 23 subzero days, according to the weather service.

"My expectations were just to see snow, since I had only seen snow a handful of times before I moved here," said Castaneda, 25, of Logan Square. "In Miami, on the coldest of days it's still 65 degrees."

His first winter offered plenty of lessons about living in a cold climate: Always layer before going outside, invest in quality boots and coats, budget extra time when leaving the house to don all that gear and account for transportation delays. And resist the urge to stay in bed all weekend.

"I still like walking around in the snow ... and I live right across the street from Humboldt Park, so I go out there when it's all snowy," he said. "And I try to make the most of game nights or other stuff like that."

For Alicia Gonzalez, 39, of Evanston, the first step to getting through winter after she moved to Chicago last year from Mexico City was to get a long jacket.

"People said get a jacket, one that covers your butt," she said. "We had jackets, but they went only to the waist, and that really doesn't work."

2015 marks the return of a Subway classic

Matt Pais

» mpais@tribune.com
» @mattpais

Considering last year ended with the sudden release of a new D'Angelo album and a major studio's movie nearly being thwarted by a leak/threats dubiously blamed on North Korea—two things I never believed would happen—the universe clearly has no interest in giving us a peek at the future.

That never stopped anyone from guessing wildly, though, so here are 15 things I say are guaranteed to take place in 2015. And by guaranteed, I mean have slightly more than zero percent chance of happening.

1. Kanye and Adele release an album together

Her new record has taken too long for something not to be up her sleeve. Kanye may not enjoy sharing the limelight, but Adele's not a competitor (note Yeezy's Paul McCartney collaboration), and he loves defying expectations. They will be known as Kandeale; everyone will pronounce it Candle.

2. "Avengers: Age of Ultron" becomes the highest-grossing movie of all time

Estimated earnings: 1 gajillion dollars.

3. Subway brings back the Orchard Chicken Salad sandwich

Mostly because I want them to.

4. It will become a felony to rhyme "down on my knees" with "begging please" in a song

Also, it will be against the law to write songs about breathing or the booty. Many artists quit due to an inability to think up alternatives.

5. Tom Hardy ("The Dark Knight Rises," "Inception") finally becomes a household name and is nominated for an Oscar

The former is because of "Mad Max: Fury Road." The latter is just a hunch.

6. A popular, 50-page YA novel will be divided into 12 movies, all of which will announce their future release dates

The final installment will be set for 2036 and star someone who is not yet born.

7. Katherine Heigl's TV show "State of Affairs" begins being broadcast exclusively to super-market checkout aisles DVDs of the series are free with purchase of tomatoes.

8. The "Entourage" movie is better than expected

The stars all admit they didn't think it was a good idea either. Then Jerry Ferrara smiles to himself, knowing that he's been the busiest since the show ended and needed the big-screen version the least.

9. Reviving "Fantastic Four" and "Vacation" works. The new "Jem and the Holograms" doesn't.

Also, someone will announce plans to do a live-action version of "The Care Bears," which sounds more inspired than the upcoming, live-action/CGI blend "The Jungle Book."

10. The Cubs provide reason to smile

Not the case with Jay Cutler.

11. Jay Z and Beyonce headline Lollapalooza

Probably not, but this has to happen eventually, right? Backup: Nicki Minaj.

12. Jack White (The White Stripes, The Raconteurs, The Dead Weather) and Jack Antonoff (Steel Train, Fun, Bleachers) form and dissolve a band together in the same day

Several music publications (incorrectly) identify them as the greatest duo of all time.

13. In a flash of clarity, everyone in the world realizes they never again have to say the name Justin Bieber

Other celebrities no longer paid attention: Chris Brown, Gwyneth Paltrow, Iggy Azalea.

14. My dog learns to talk

We say so much to her, and she understands a good portion of it. I just refuse to believe it's not going to happen.

15. Judd Apatow's "Trainwreck," co-starring a wide variety of random people (Daniel Radcliffe, Amy Schumer, Tilda Swinton, John Cena, Method Man), reveals LeBron James also is the best actor on the planet

No, not really.

ONE TOO MANY: MY WAKE-UP CALL

By Kristin Samuelson | REDEYE

TECHNOLOGY

I WOKE up with my cheek pressed to my cold bathroom floor, partially cradling the even colder toilet. It was Jan. 1, 2010 and New Year's Eve had gotten just a little too out of control. Who hasn't been there, amirite? I was 26, familiar with the occasional night of binge drinking and a solid hangover. You'd think I would have known my limits by that age, but it wasn't until my then-boyfriend looked me straight in the eyes and broached the topic of my drinking while I sat there staring back, head pounding and stomach churning.

"You're just too smart and talented and have too much promise to throw it away on alcohol," he said.

"Because I'm hung over?" I asked, stunned. "People have hangovers all the time. OK, so sometimes I go a little overboard with my friends, but I'm not throwing my life away." What he saw, though, was me inching toward a dangerous path. As sharp as his statement was, it was clearly what I needed to hear.

I still find it odd to this day that I, myself, hadn't yet thought about my own drinking, considering alcoholism runs rampant in my family, making me more predisposed to develop a drinking problem. I grew up knowing my grandma had been a devoted member of Alcoholics Anonymous since before I was born, and my close immediate family member who's now 16 years sober spoke frequently about his recovery in AA. While talking about "the disease" made me aware of my heightened genetic risk of developing an addiction, it hadn't yet caused me to question my own drinking habits. Helloo, Kristin?

In college, when I was out for the night, I never thought about how much I was drinking. I would get so entrenched in the social aspect that I'd just down drinks, not thinking about how it was impairing my mind and body. That's just what you do in college—or at least what has become the unhealthy "norm." You play flip cup, do keg stands and chug jungle juice because it's "funny" when you drunk-dial boys and tell stupid stories from the night before.

But then, if you're anything like me, after you graduate from college, that style of drinking doesn't naturally just end. You go to happy hours, have multiple social circles that want you to meet them for drinks on different nights of the week and reunite with high school friends on "Blackout Wednesday." So by the time I was 26, I hadn't realized I had continued drinking like a college kid.

Binge drinking is defined by the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention as five or more drinks for men and four or more drinks for women in about two hours. (Show of hands if you haven't seen that regularly?) It is reported by 1 in 6 U.S. adults, according to a 2012 CDC study, and accounts for more than half of the alcohol consumed by adults, according to the U.S. Department of Justice. And although the CDC says, "Most people who binge drink are not alcohol dependent," multiple studies have been published that say adolescent problem drinking is associated with problem drinking in early adulthood.

Luckily for me, I was able to avoid becoming part of those statistics, thanks to the epiphany I had five years ago. I consider that New Year's Day my wake-up call to the rest of my healthy, adult life. To this day, when I order a beer or open a bottle of wine, I think about that morning and it helps me keep myself in check. Sure, I still go out and take part in the social aspect of drinking, but I'm now aware of how much I'm consuming. Shots are a rarity. I know my limits. Hell, for the first six months of 2010, I practically stopped drinking altogether. The thought of drinking actually scared me.

What I had learned about alcoholism was mostly based on what I was taught in childhood-prevention programs like D.A.R.E.: If you drink alone, you're an alcoholic; as long as you're happy when you're drunk, you don't have a problem; as long as you can hold a job, you're not an addict; as long as you don't need a drink when you wake up, you're not an addict. But are those true or just clichés we use to rationalize our bad behavior?

The more people I talk to about "problem drinking" versus "healthy drinking," the more I realize I wasn't alone in questioning what's "normal." Turns out, a lot of people have a difficult time defining "addiction" as it pertains to their own lifestyles, which is why RedEye will be devoting our 2015 editorial initiative to delving into the many forms of addiction, from alcohol and drugs to sex, food, technology and more.

I realize that at RedEye, we're responsible for telling readers what to drink and eat, and where they can find a good party or bar, so our goal with this coverage is not to preach, judge or condemn. We encourage fun. We're all about the YOLO. But we also, like someone did for me in 2010, want to raise the awareness—and start a conversation—about addiction. Finding a way to define and achieve responsible behavior is something I think we can all get behind.

You can find our coverage online and in print every Wednesday this year. As ever, we'd like to hear your feedback. If you want us to consider sharing your stories related to addiction in our publication, please send them to redeye@redeychicago.com with "Addiction" in the subject line.

Americans die each day from alcohol poisoning

- » Three-quarters of the deaths are adults between 35 and 64 years old.
- » 1 in 6 (more than 38 million) U.S. adults binge drink. In 2012, 24.6 percent of people ages 18 or older reported that they engaged in binge drinking in the past month.
- » More than 10 percent of U.S. children live with a parent with alcohol problems, according to a 2012 study.

SMOKING

The number of average deaths per year caused by smoking in the United States from 2005 to 2009.

- » 3 in 10 cancer deaths in the U.S. are tobacco related.
- » An additional 16 million people suffer with a serious illness caused by smoking.
- » 53 percent of survey respondents to a 2013 Pew Research survey called cigarette smoking an “extremely” or “very” serious public health problem.

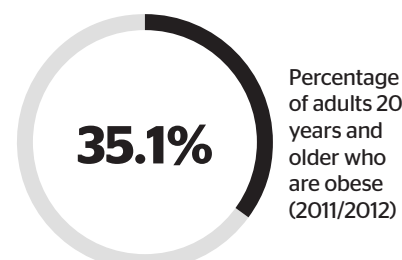

DEPENDENCY BY THE NUMBERS: WHERE DO WE STAND?

The Centers for Disease Control and Prevention say most people who binge drink are not dependent on alcohol, but looking at statistics on how much America drinks—or smokes, does drugs, overeats or watches porn, for that matter—got our attention. Regardless of whether these vices directly lead to lives of addiction, they’re worth taking a closer look and why RedEye is devoting a year to exploring addiction. k.s.

FOOD

- » Adults who had a family history of alcoholism were 30 to 40 percent more likely to be obese than those with no alcoholism in the family, according to a Washington University School of Medicine study published in 2011.

- » Overeating isn’t necessarily caused by a lack of willpower, but by the biological makeup of foods rich in sugar and fats that are often served at chain restaurants all around us, according to a book by Dr. David A. Kessler, pediatrician and former Food and Drug Administration commissioner.

DRUGS

- » In 2013, 21.6 million people 12 years old or older needed treatment for an illicit drug or alcohol abuse problem.
- » In 2013, 9.9 million people (3.8 percent of those aged 12 or older) reported driving under the influence of illicit drugs during the past year. The rate was highest among young adults 18-25 years old.

Frostbitten cat Sunny reminds pet owners of dangerous weather

Chicago Tribune

As Chicagoans struggle through the season's first serious blast of cold weather, a cat named Sunny has a much-needed refuge.

City workers recently picked up 1-year-old Sunny wandering around 8600 South Colfax Avenue and brought her to Chicago's animal control center. Animal shelter PAWS Chicago took in the multicolored kitty Monday.

Sunny now is at the PAWS facility in Little Village being treated for frostbitten ears, according to spokeswoman Sarah Ahlberg. She also needed to be shaved to remove her badly matted fur and is severely underweight at only 2½ pounds.

"We unfortunately see that quite often during these months," Ahlberg said. "We're trying to figure out why she's so underweight ... so we're going to run some blood-work on her. But she's doing splendidly."

PAWS rescues about 6,000 animals a year, most of which are transfers from the city's animal control center. Ahlberg said the shelter sees more strays in the summer-time. But stray dogs and cats suffer in the cold weather and often come down with hypothermia and frostbite, as Sunny did.

Chicago residents can call 311 or fill out an online form to report animals that appear to be homeless.

Animal control advocates urge pet owners to protect their dogs and cats from the cold. City animal control officials say dogs and cats are best off being indoors and that low wind chills, like those hitting the area this week, can be life-threatening for pets. Dogs with short hair are particularly vulnerable and may need a sweater when taken outside. Owners also should wipe off their pets' paws after a walk because road salt can hurt their pads and their mouths if they lick it.

Outdoor dogs need protection from the cold with an adequately sized doghouse and more food than usual, according to officials.

PAWS Chicago further recommends that owners never leave pets alone in a car. Owners should contact their veterinarian if their pets show signs of hypothermia or frostbite, such as shivering, breathing problems and shriveled skin.

PAWS will treat Sunny, but she cannot be adopted until the city's stray hold expires, giving any owners time to claim her. Otherwise she could be available for adoption after a few weeks, Ahlberg said.

Students robbed at gunpoint near IIT campus: cops

By Megan Crepeau | REDEYE

Chicago police say students were the victims in two separate holdups near the Illinois Institute of Technology campus in the past week.

At about 2 p.m. and again at about 2:15 p.m. on Friday, police say that two males wearing hooded sweatshirts approached the students, showed them a revolver and asked for "everything." Authorities had only vague descriptions of the thieves, who got away with cell-phones, bags, wallets, credit and debit cards, as well as currency from India and identification.

A police spokesman declined to say how many students were robbed or which schools they attend.

The robberies happened on the 2900 block of South Indiana Avenue and the 3200 block of South Rhodes Avenue, police said.

Anyone with information is encouraged to contact Area Central detectives at 312-747-8382.

New GOP Congress meets veto threat

Republicans took complete control of Congress for the first time in eight years Tuesday, then ran straight into a White House veto threat against their top-priority legislation to build the Keystone XL oil pipeline.

Republicans condemned the announcement, which came at the same time they were speaking brightly about bipartisan compromises in the two years ahead.

"I'm really optimistic about what we can accomplish," said Kentucky Sen. Mitch McConnell, moments after he was recognized as leader of the new Republican majority on one side of the Capitol.

At the other end of the building, Rep. John Boehner of Ohio easily won a third term as House speaker despite attempts by tea party-backed dissidents to topple him. He said the 114th Congress would begin by passing legislation to "develop more North American energy" among top priorities, adding, "We invite the president to support and sign these bipartisan initiatives into law."

It was an offer the White House did refuse—in advance. "If this bill passes Congress, the president wouldn't sign it," presidential press secretary Josh Earnest said before Boehner spoke. He said the measure would undermine the administration's review process.

Venezuela's more than 100 McDonald's franchises have run out of potatoes and now are serving alternatives like deep-fried arepa flatbreads or yuca, a starchy staple of South American cooking. GM CHANGERS

Clock's ticking—will Bears have two hires in place by week's end?

Chicago Tribune

The Bears' decision-makers appear to be running a no-huddle.

According to Tribune sources, the Bears have at least three interviews for their vacant general manager position set for this week. Chairman George McCaskey and team President Ted Phillips prefer to hire a general manager before a coach, so the search becomes more urgent as it moves into its second week.

The Bears are scheduled to interview Arizona Cardinals defensive coordinator Todd Bowles on Saturday for their coaching vacancy, a league source said. That could indicate an expectation or desire to have their GM in place by the end of the week.

At the very least, Bowles is one of the most sought-after coaching candidates, and there's pressure to interview him before another team hires him.

In the meantime, these three general manager candidates appear to have a foot in the door:

CHRIS BALLARD

(will interview Wednesday)

Age: 45

Current job: Kansas City Chiefs director of player personnel

You might know him because: He was the Bears' southwest area scout from 2001-11 and director of pro scouting in 2012.

LAKE DAWSON

(interviewed Tuesday)

Age: 43

Current job:

Tennessee Titans vice president of player personnel

You might know him because: He was a wide receiver at Notre Dame from 1990-93.

RYAN PACE

(may interview Wednesday)

Age: 37

Current job: New Orleans Saints director of player personnel

You might know him because: He was a defensive end at Eastern Illinois from 1995-99.

BRRRRRR

Seriously, the Bears should consider it a minor miracle if they can hire any one at all given the terrible weather this time of year.

1	How is the brutally cold weather affecting the Bears' coaching search?	It's become a search and rescue.	The "Hawk" off the lake is literally shooting away anyone that's any good.	Today is the actual temperature of Bears fans' hearts. That should scare anyone away.	It stops any discussion of "Bear weather" right in its tracks.	It's Bear weather! If it delays a coaching candidate's arrival, they don't belong here!
2	Marc Trestman might be the next offensive coordinator for the Tampa Bay Bucs. Thoughts?	Florida is where everyone goes to retire.	Well he did make Josh McCown a multimillionaire.	Tampa Bay was 2-14, so there is room for deterioration.	It's all part of his master plan to move as far from Canada as possible. I mean, Minnesota.	I know Christmas is over, but Tampa is the isle of misfit toys for the Bears!
3	Jimmy Butler can be the NBA MVP if he will finally get to say the Butler did it.	... can get the charges dropped for Bobby Shmurda. Then he'd be the real MVP.	... challenges D-Rose to see who is the best player. This is a winning challenge for Chicago.	... keeps bringing in the big buckets.	... keeps murdering the competition like the butler in the Clue board game.
4	Which U.S. city would you like to see host the 2024 Summer Olympics?	L.A. so they can bring back '24.	Chicago! #BackTheBid	Omaha, Neb., because I'm so tired of hearing them brag about corn.	Chicago! Doesn't it just scream "summer" here?	Hint: Frank Sinatra called it "my kind of town."
5	What was in the "miracle coffee" Serena Williams drank earlier this week?	Whatever it was, it wasn't a winning cup.	Hennessy, Remy Martin, possibly Night Train.	Coca leaves. Helloooo, match win! Goodbye, sleep.	Probably some of A-Rod's "magic beans."	I believe Charlie Sheen calls it #tigerblood.

Super bummer, Kaner

Superman won't be flying in to save the day. Blackhawks star Patrick Kane, who donned a cape and Clark Kent glasses and won the Breakaway Challenge at the 2012 All-Star Game, said Tuesday that he likely won't participate in the event in Columbus later this month.

"Sometimes I have some bad dreams about that contest," Kane said Tuesday. "Like I'll go out there and not have any ideas what to do. Maybe I'll let some of the younger guys take over this year and back out of that one."

HOT DATE MONDAY

That's when tickets go on sale—at 10 a.m. via Ticketmaster or blackhawks.nhl.com—for the 2015 Blackhawks Convention. The event is set for July 17-19 at the Hilton Chicago, 720 S. Michigan Ave.

THE DIGIT 6.6 PERCENT

Sammy Sosa (left) will remain on the MLB Hall of Fame ballot another year—barely. The former Cubs slugger received 6.6 percent of the vote; he needed 5 percent. The players who actually will be inducted into Cooperstown in July are Randy Johnson, Pedro Martinez, John Smoltz and Craig Biggio.

Losses pile up for Illinois

If Illinois is to return to the NCAA tournament again, it will have to do it without its best player. Rayvonte Rice, the team's leading scorer, is out indefinitely with a broken left hand, coach John Groce said Tuesday. He will undergo surgery Wednesday. The team has already lost point guard Tracy Abrams to injury in the preseason.

LIVE
from Chicago

14 can't-miss January concerts

By Andy Downing | FORREDEYE

Make it your belated New Year's resolution in 2015 to get out and see more live music. January offers plenty of options, whether you prefer large-scale events (Sam Smith at UIC Pavilion) or more intimate affairs. That's not including Tomorrow Never Knows, the annual multi-day, multi-venue music festival, which packs an assortment of established and up-and-coming acts. Watch for our list of the 10 TNK acts not to be missed; for now, the best of the rest.

Ben Kweller*Saturday at Metro*

Kweller, now in his early 30s, has spent more than half his life in the music industry (his first band, Radish, sparked a label bidding war before he was old enough to drive). More recently he's branching out, dabbling with acting in "Rudderless," a film directed by William H. Macy.

Slim Twig*Jan. 15 at Empty Bottle*

Slim Twig, the nom de rock of Toronto's Max Turnbull, performs here in support of "A Hound at the Hem," a dark, sophisticated pop record that easily could score a David Lynch film.

KRS-One*Jan. 16 at the Shrine*

The hip-hop legend has never shied away from addressing political and social issues in his music, and it wouldn't surprise if he delivered an impassioned performance that touches on the unrest that has gripped the country since the late-summer events in Ferguson, Mo.

Weyes Blood*Jan. 16 at Empty Bottle*

Singer-songwriter Natalie

Mering builds the songs on her indie folk-leaning sophomore album "The Innocents" with little more than an acoustic guitar and her sweet soprano.

Mayhem and Watain*Jan. 16 at Bottom Lounge*

The bandmates in Spinal Tap likely would describe this metal double-bill as "none more black," and they would be correct.

Wale*Jan. 16 at House of Blues*

"Seinfeld" has been off the air since 1998, but it's still inspiring new music in rapper Wale. The MC released "The Mixtape About Nothing" in 2008 and recently followed with a second mixtape inspired by the sitcom ("Festivus"), leading to the forthcoming "Album About Nothing."

Lucero*Jan. 17 at Concord Music Hall*

Lucero singer Ben Nichols has a husky, whiskey-drenched voice perfectly suited to the damaged, blue-collar characters that populate the Southern rock band's songs.

Cult of YouthJan. 17 at Empty Bottle*

The optimism that bled through on 2012's "Love Will Prevail" all but disappears on "Final Days," the bleak, pessimistic new album from the chamber-punks in Brooklyn's Cult of Youth.

Jose James*Jan. 18 at the Promontory*

The chameleon-esque singer charts an eclectic course on his fifth album, "While You Were Sleeping," swinging from jazzy numbers to electro-soul cuts that buzz like the Matrix.

Wale

Weyes Blood

Fall Out Boy

Sam Smith

Jan. 23 at UIC Pavilion

The sensitive Brit titled his solo debut "In the Lonely Hour," but with the album now having sold more than a million copies in both the U.S. and in the U.K. it's a safe bet solitude is hard to come by.

Sam Smith

Bahamas

Fall Out Boy

Jan. 24 at Lincoln Hall

The pop-punk crew visits its hometown just days after the scheduled release of its sixth studio album, "American Beauty/American Psycho."

Bahamas

Jan. 29 at Lincoln Hall

On past efforts, Canadian-born singer-songwriter Afie Jurvanen, who records and performs under the name Bahamas, ensconced himself in pretty, melancholic pop songs born of heartbreak and romantic failing. The singer's latest, "Bahamas Is Afie," continues this melancholic trend.

Jeff Daniels

Jan. 29 at City Winery

The "Dumb and Dumber To"/"Newsroom" actor straddles a similar line in his music, taking a serious approach to folk-leaning songs that often incorporate a humorous element.

Logic

Jan. 30 at Riviera Theatre

Maryland rapper Logic, born Robert Bryson Hall II, plays here in support of his debut full-length "Under Pressure," an album that takes a shallow dive into his challenging childhood.

Game of Thrones: Episode One—Iron From Ice

iPhone/iPad, PC, PlayStation 3 & 4, Xbox 360 & One

So far, the video game version of "Game of Thrones" qualifies as a non-power fantasy. Instead of putting you in the virtual boots of dragon-slaying knights or the soldier who saves the day, Telltale Games' interactive take on George R.R. Martin's fiction instead shifts the focus to a rather humble house caught in the middle of all of the warring and scheming between Westeros' mighty. You play as various members of House Forrester (not on the HBO show, and barely mentioned in the books) who suddenly find themselves having to appease Roose Bolton and the Lannisters following the infamous Red Wedding. If that last sentence sounds like gibberish, "Iron From Ice" probably is not for you. Episode 1 is a worthy take on the "Game of Thrones" universe, but it practically begs you to already be steeped in its arcane lore.

WWE 2K15

PlayStation 3 & 4, Xbox 360 & One

Keep it simple, stupid. It's a mantra the makers of the annual WWE games should have remembered. "WWE 2K15" introduces a new "chain wrestling" mechanic that turns many close encounters with your opponent into a mini game of paper-rock-scissors. Also added: multiple stamina and health bars that tell you, for example, how badly your left leg is ailing. All this needless complexity robs the performance art of professional wrestling of its kinetics. It's great fun to see old favorites like the Ultimate Warrior and Hulk Hogan return, and there's a wealth of options for creating a wrestler from scratch, but the game itself is a boring slog.

Peggle Blast

iPhone/iPad

In some ways, this is the best version of "Peggle" on the planet. The latest puzzler from PopCap Games doesn't exactly reinvent the wheel: you're still happily shooting pinballs at a brightly-colored peg board while a rainbow unicorn looks on. But "Blast" introduces more variety with new characters, and adds mud-slinging gnomes and tricky fireballs to the mix of obstacles. The problem is that PopCap has adopted the greedy "Candy Crush" monetization model. Some levels are frustratingly difficult to complete—seemingly on purpose so you'll give in and pay $1.99 for three more balls and special powers. RYAN SMITH IS A REDEYE SPECIAL CONTRIBUTOR.

SketchFest 2015

Two Bunnies is one of 150-plus acts in The Chicago Sketch Comedy Festival, aka SketchFest, running Jan. 8-18 at Stage 773 (1225 W. Belmont Ave.) Fest calendar and tickets online: chicagosketchfest.com

THE ELEMENT OF SURPRISE

By Jason Heidemann | FOR REDEYE

Full-frontal nudity, locking an audience member in a box and banana peels all over the stage ... it was all in a show for comedy trio Two Bunnies Eating Flowers, aka Alex Hanpeter, Kyle Reinhard and Jude Tedmori. The three were joined together through The Second City's comedy studies program in 2012, and their 2013 Chicago SketchFest debut "Horses Aren't People, Fishes Aren't Dogs" blew the roof off that year's festival with the aforementioned antics. Since that time, the trio has continued to perfect its slapstick whack-job comedy via "Hijinks," its monthly show with fellow sketch group Sovereign at The Public House Theatre. In anticipation of the group's Jan. 17 SketchFest show "War on Two Bunnies," we gathered at Ann Sather in Lakeview to talk about Looney Tunes, angry stage managers and the worst night of their lives.

What was the audience reaction to your 2013 SketchFest debut?

Kyle Reinhard: The stage managers were upset with us. They saw all the bananas scattered everywhere and were like, "You guys must be pretty pleased with yourselves." Our director [Mike Klasek] had to tell us, "Just so you know, you should feel really, really good."

Jude Tedmori: They got so mad at us for making such a huge mess. Now we look at it as one of our finest achievements.

How do you keep raising the stakes from show to show?

JT: Our director has always said you're going to chase your tail trying to top yourselves, so always make a lateral move.

Alex Hanpeter: Our first show was more risk-based, so I think it came across as performance art. Our next show was more distinct sketches.

JT: Last year's [SketchFest] show was us trying to chase the dog's tail so hard. We all had panic attacks.

What's the appeal to absurdism?

AH: My big thing is surprise. If I'm watching something and I know where it's going, then I'll get bored.

KR: You always want to stay a step ahead of people.

JT: We're clearly influenced by Looney Tunes, so I feel like that cartoon logic comes from the absurdism.

Have you ever offended an audience?

JT: We got heckled once from a guy. [In the sketch] it was Kyle and me on the phone and Alex is lying on the ground and he's asking about ...

AH: ... basically trying to get permission to rape me. At first he was a college student, but eventually we turned it into a robot who is learning. I think it had a really good point.

KR: It was definitely a feminist sketch, but we did it totally out of context in front of a drunk guy at 1 a.m. in the morning. That was the worst night of all of our lives.

Are you interested in pushing audiences?

KR: You can't let your audience be passive. You never want people sitting back and analyzing your sketch while you're doing it. You just want their caveman brain to be the thing that's processing it.

JT: We did a show in New York and they had no idea who we were, so they weren't expecting anything. I remember when I walked out naked for the first time, I heard people screaming. They were genuinely shocked. That's always what I'm striving for.

What's one word that describes your new show?

KR: Stream-of-conscious.

JT: Different.

AR: Playful.

What shows are you looking forward to at this year's fest?

JT: MRS. have a commitment to character and theatricality in sketch comedy that is a big inspiration to Two Bunnies. Also, Oh Theodora. Buck [LePard], Lisa [Dellagiarino Feriend] and Trevor [Martin] are some of the best, most unique performers in the city and have a point of view on sketch that's different from anyone else's in Chicago.

AH: Dean Is. Dean Evans engages with audiences thoughtfully and unexpectedly, and his show will certainly both look and be completely insane.

KR: Rabbit Rabbit. Chris [Blake] and Andrew [Bentley] are terrific performers who execute great shows. And come on, Two Bunnies? Rabbit Rabbit? Think about it ...

Love is DEAD

A WALK TO REMEMBER 2002

The lovers: Landon (Shane West) and Jamie (Mandy Moore)

The real ending: Landon and Jamie get married, spend a lovely summer together, she DIES and he eventually is accepted to medical school.

The heartbreak ending: While at medical school, Landon finds a cure that could have saved Jamie. Oh, but he's far too late.

What if Nicholas Sparks' movies didn't have a happy ending?

By Dana Moran | REDEYE

Chick-lit authors are supposed to be experts in romance, right? Perhaps not. Author Nicholas Sparks has split from Cathy, his wife of 25 years, thr.com reports. Alas, yet another famous couple whose love story ends in tragedy. Right now, Sparks is probably hurling books and sherry into the fireplace and cursing the world, wishing he could change the ending to some of his most famous works. Fortunately, we have that power. Here's how we'd change the ending to the movie adaptations of Sparks' books—for the worse. Fair warning: Spoilers abound.

DAMORAN@TRIBUNE.COM | @REDEYEDANA

THE NOTEBOOK 2004

The lovers: Noah (Ryan Gosling) and Allie (Rachel McAdams)

The real ending: Noah and Allie are reunited, then they DIE peacefully in bed together in their old age.

The heartbreak ending: Noah falls in love with a nurse at the hospital and she agrees to marry him for the money.

DEAR JOHN 2010

The lovers: John (Channing Tatum) and Savannah (Amanda Seyfried)

The real ending: Savannah's husband DIES, which she reveals to John in a letter. They reunite outside a coffee shop.

The heartbreak ending: John never receives the letter, and Savannah suffers for the rest of her life wondering why he didn't respond.

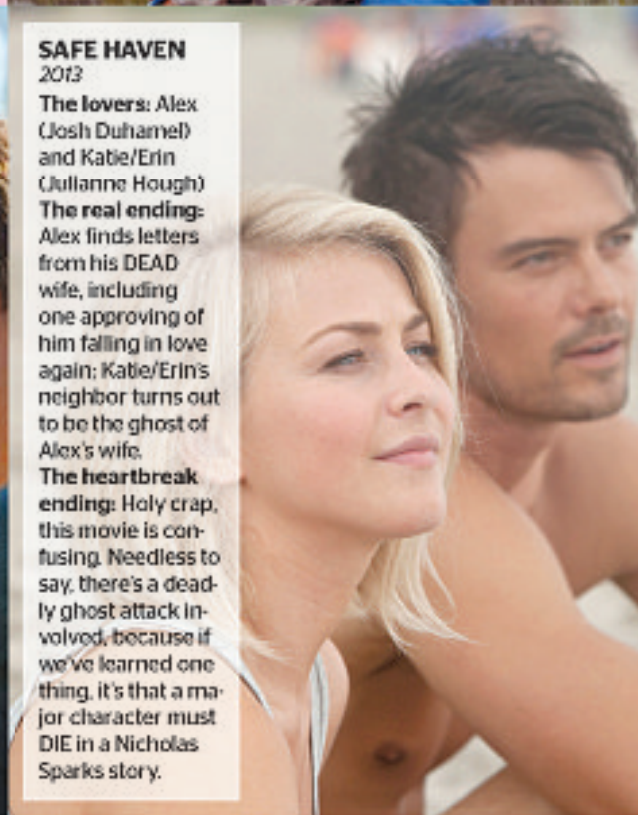

THE LUCKY ONE 2012

The lovers: Logan (Zac Efron) and Beth (Taylor Schilling)

The real ending: Beth's brother DIES, but Logan, Beth, her son and Zeus the dog become a family.

The heartbreak ending: Zeus the dog has rabies.

SAFE HAVEN 2013

The lovers: Alex (Josh Duhamel) and Katie/Erin (Julianne Hough)

The real ending: Alex finds letters from his DEAD wife, including one approving of him falling in love again; Katie/Erin's neighbor turns out to be the ghost of Alex's wife.

The heartbreak ending: Holy crap, this movie is confusing. Needless to say, there's a deadly ghost attack involved, because if we've learned one thing, it's that a major character must DIE in a Nicholas Sparks story.

GIRLS! GIRLS! GIRLS!

Add two more "Girls" to that, thanks. Even though Season 4 of HBO's "Girls" doesn't premiere until Sunday, the show has been picked up for a fifth season. THR.com reports that network president Michael Lombardo made the announcement at the show's New York premiere Monday night. Meanwhile, star Lena Dunham told Elle magazine for its February issue that "[Fame] was always going to make me feel gross, for lack of a better word. I was like, 'Oh, this attention is something I'm going to figure out how to use in a way that feels productive, healthy, and smart. And not just like as an excuse to collect handbags.'"

HOT DATES

JAN. 23-29

That's when HBO will air the final two episodes of Season 4 of "Game of Thrones" in select IMAX theaters, the network announced. They'll be accompanied by a trailer for Season 5, which is what you're really going to the theater for because new episodes aren't coming until APRIL AUUUUUUGH. A featurette, "A Day in the Life," will air Feb. 8 and give a behind-the-scenes look at the new season. It's going to be a long winter.

Would you read it in a house? Would you read it with a mouse?

Is Danny Brown the next Dr. Seuss? Maybe, if everything goes the Detroit rapper's way. He told Australian radio station Triple J that he's writing a book about self-esteem in young women of color, inspired by his daughter. We expect his rapping skills will translate really well to the written word—and some wacky characters, too.

That's how many times Rosamund Pike and Neil Patrick Harris shot their sex scene in "Gone Girl," Vanity Fair reports. Director David Fincher says the team used "36 sheets, 450 gallons of blood and 36 pairs of underpants" to film the gruesome encounter. Blahfdjkafkafd.

Baby boom

To share, or not to share?

Nick and Vanessa Lachey have gone the first route with their new baby girl, Brooklyn Elisabeth. According to Vanessa's blog, the couple's second child was born Monday at 7 pounds, 15 ounces and 21 inches long. Meanwhile, Blake Lively and Ryan Reynolds are opting for privacy with their baby, who Page Six reports was born just before the new year.

THE QUOTE

"Do the opposite of what I did, and you'll be fine."
